Learning Objectives:

Upon completion of this activity, participants should be able to:

1. Participants will become familiar with the psychological adaptation in patients and families following unexpected/unplanned injury or critical illness, and the impact of same on treatment providers;
2. Participants will recognize the variables patients, family members, and treatment providers “bring to the table,” impacting overall patient/provider interactions and the subsequent impacts on cooperative development of goals of care;
3. Participants will identify strategies to utilize to promote and optimize communication encounters with patients and families, inclusive of impacts of body language and the importance of effective communication, universally, in patient care.
